Special Issue on: “Innovative Approaches in Technology and Manufacturing Management”

The increasing complexity of products, production structures and processing procedures combined with turbulent market expectations, resulting in a growth of product variety, individualisation and a time reduction, have set new frontiers for business manufacturing.

Furthermore, nowadays firms are facing an hard global competition that compels them to improve the efficiency and the effectiveness of their systems. Considering these circumstances, it is important to elaborate innovative methodologies and new strategies that will increase industrial performance.

This special issue aims to provide a forum for the dissemination of information about innovative approaches in technology and manufacturing management. Authors are encouraged to submit manuscripts including the state of the art, industrial applications and case studies.
